Wonderful Vision-The Marvels Beheld by a Boy with a Telescopic Eye. (From the New York Mercury.)

Professor Gibbins, the president of the San Francisco College of Sciences, has been investigating a most remarkable phenome non-that of a boy who possesses what may be termed a telescopic eye. A Mercury correspondent sends the report of the Professor on the case, which is confirmed by the signs. tures of Drs. Bryant, Gadbury, and Goldson and approved by Professor Smyth, the ocu list. So far, therefore, as authenticity and scientific accuracy are concerned, upon the faith of these gentlemen, readers may rely implicitly upon the absolute correctness of every fact stated and conclusion reached. The report, in substance, sets forth the following startling statements:

The name of this remarkable child is John Palmer, aged nine years, and place of residence south San Francisco, Culp Hill, near the Catholic Orphan Asplum. It appears that the period through which the investi-gation rap was only sheen days; but it seems to have been so thorough by the us of the opthalmoscope and other modern appliances and tests that no regrets ought to be indulged as to the brevity of the time employed in experiments.

The committee having folly examined the boy, and a number of independent witnesses as to the facts, seen set about a scientific investigation of the true rauses of the phenomenon. The fret step, of course, was to examine the lad's eye, with the modern op theimoscope, by means of which the depths o this organ can be explored, and the smallest variations from a healthy or normal condition instantaneously detected.

On applying the instrument the committee ascertained in a moment that the boy's eye was abnormally shaped. A natural, perfect eye is perfectly round. But the eye exem ined was exceedingly flit, very thin, with large iris, fix lens, immense petira, and wonderfully dilated pupil. The effect of the shape was at once apparent. It was utterly impossible to see any object with distinct ness at any distance short of many thousands of miles. Had the eye been elongated in-ward, or shaped like an egg, to as great an extent, the boy would have been effectually blind, for no combination of lens-power could have placed the image of the object beyond the coat of the retina. In other words, there are two common imperfections of the human organ of sight-one called myopia, or "near-sightedness," the other pre-byopia, or "far-sightedness."

"The sxis being too long," says the re port, "in myopic eyes, parallel rays, such as proceed from distant objects, are brought to a focus at a point so far in front of the re'ina that only confused images are formed upon it. Such a malformation, constituting an excess of refractive power, can only be neutralized by concave glasses, which give such a direction to rays entering the eye ss will allow of their being brought to a focus at a proper point for distant perception." Presbyopia is the reverse of all this. The anteroposterior axis of such eyes being too short, owing to the flat plate-like shape of the ball, their refractive power is not sufficient to bring even parallel rays to a focus upon the retma, but is adopted for convergent rays only. Convex glasses, in a great measure, compensate for this quality by rendering parallel rays convergent; and such glasses, in ordinary cases, bring the rays to a focus at a convenient disfrom the unwided eye of the patient at upon the retina was 240,000 miles-a fraction short of the mean distance of the moon from the earth; and hence it became perfectly clear that the boy could see with minute distinctness whatever was HAPPENING ON THE SURPACE OF THE MOON. It was on the night of January 9, 1876 that the first satisfactory experiment was tried, testing beyond all cavil or doubt the powers of the subject's eye. It was full zlingly bright. The committee were on hand at an early hour, and the boy was in fine New York Journal of Commerce. condition and exuberant spirits. The interview was secret, and none but the members of the committee and the parents of the child were present. Of course the first proposition to be settled was the inhabitability of that sphere. This the boy had frequently de clared was the case, and bad on several previous occasions described minutely the form, size, and means of locomotion of the Lunarians. On this occasion he repeated in almost the same language what he had before related to his parents and friends, but was more minute, owing to the greater transparency of the atmosphere and the experience in expression already acquired.

body, and finally assume the appearance of a Journal of Commerce.

They are of different colors, or nationali ties-bright red, orange, and blue being the predominant bues. The reds are in a large majority. They do no work, but sleep every four or five bours. They have no houses and need none. They have no clothing, and do not require it. There being no night on the side of the moon fronting the sun, and no day on the opposite side, all the inhabitants, apparently at a given signal of some kind, form into vast armies and flock in my riads to the sleeping-grounds on the shadow side of the planet. They do not appear to go very far over the dark rim; for they reappear in immense platoons in a few hours, and soon spread themselves over the illuminated surface. They sleep and wake about six times in one ordinary day of twenty-four hours. Their occupations cannot be discerned—they must be totally different from anything upon the earth.

THE SURFACE OF THE MOON is all hill and hollow. There are but few level spots, nor is there any water visible The atmosphere is almost as refined and light as bydrogen gas. There is no fire visible, nor are there any volcanoes. Most of the time of the inhabitants seems to be spent in playing games of locomotion, spreading themselves into squares, circles, triangles, or other mathematical figures. They move always in vast crowds. No one or two are ever seen reparated from the main bodies. The children also flock in herds, and seem to be all of one family. Individualism is unknown. They seem to spawn like herring or shad, or to be propagated like bees, from the queen, in myriads. Motion is their normal condition. The moment after a mathematical figure is formed it is dissolved and fresh combinations take place, like the atoms in a kaleidoscope. No other species of aulmal, bird, or being exists upon the illuminated face of the moon.

THE SHRUBBERT AND PROFTATION OF THE MOON are all metallic. Vegetable life nowhere ex.

But there is a new kind of metal seen everywhere on tree, shrub, and flower, nowhere known on the earth. It is of a bright, virtilion color, and semi-transparent. THE WONDERS OF MARS. There is but one large telescope praperly mounted in San Francisco, and that is the property of J. P. Manrow, Enq. In concluding the present paper it may be said the committee took steps immediately to proceed with the investigation on a grander and more scientific scale, the result of which will be eagerly anticipated.

New York. March 21, 1876 Editor of the Journal of Commerce :

Being a daughter of a subscriber of your journal, and a constant reader of that valueble paper, I take the liberty to ask the following question: Who is the author of the quotation "Cleanliness is next to godliness"? And in which one of the author's works does it occur? Please answer and oblige, Yours truly,

Reply .- The sentence is often quoted as sacred Scripture, and indeed we need not wonder, since it was written by a Hebrew, and is older than many parts of the Bible. It first appears in Beraitha, as the last Mishna of Sota, chapter ix. It is afterwards found tance from the glass, corresponding to its de- in other Hebrew works, from one of which gree of curvature. The meaning of the original is that cleanliness is next to (or akin to, would perhaps be a closer rendering.) godliness or holiness. We have an old Latin rendering of the same, which for many years we took to be the original, until we discovered the earlier authority. For the benefit of the uneducated we may add that Mishna (from the Hebrew Skanah-to change, to repeat) is used to describe a collection of Jewish traditions and explanations of Scripture, and moon, and that luminary rose clear and daz. this oft-quoted sentence made its first appearance, as we have said, in such a work .-

> IN THOSE DAYS THERE WERE PIGMIES IN THE LAND .- [ Woodbury (Tenn.) Press ]-An ancient graveyard of vast proportions has been found in Coffee county. It is similar to those found in Wnite county and other places in Middle Tennessee, but is vastly more extensive, and shows that the race of pigmies who once inhabited this country were very numerous. The same peculiarities of position observed in the White county graves are found in these. The writer of the letter says: "Some considerable exci'ement and cariosty took place a few days since near Hillsboro', Coffee county, on James Brown's farm. A man was ploughing in a field which has been cultivated many years, and ploughed up a man's skull and other bones. After making further examination they found that there was about six acres in the graveyard. They were buried in a sitting or standing position. The bones show that they were a dwarf tribe of people about three feet high. It is estimated that there were about 75,000 to 100,000 buried there. This shows that this country was inhabited hundreds of years ago."

Who carries the mail from Og-tra-gounosb, away up on the Minnesota line, to the nearest frontier settlement in Dakota? Why, Boss, a mongrel kind of dog, an apparent ultimate result of the mingling of every kind of dog found in the Territory. Boss's master a year age was a drunken balf-breed, who was paid $3 a trip in summer and $5 in winter for taking the mails a distance of some sixty miles. Boss's master was honest, and never purloined a letter, but he had a way of drinking on the road, and the mails were often delayed. Last January the mail-carrier never resched his destination, but was found frozen stiff in a snew bank three miles beyoud Jobley's run. Boss was keeping guard over his master and the mail. Now Boss runs the machine in bad weather. All that has to be done is to take Boss and secure the

An English judge has just sentenced a man to imprisonment at hard labor for fifteen years for writing a letter. He was a bairdresser who had been some time employed professionally by the wife of a London mer-chant. The lady was of a very nervous and of which will be given by application to as and at excitable temperament, and she was also somewhat extravagant. It seems that she even borrowed money of her bair-dresser and gave him 10Us for the amount. For some reason or other she discharged the man without baving paid what she owed.
